

What I'm Looking At

For architect Jill Neubauer, influences from her home state of Wisconsin help guide her work. The singular beauty of birch bark also fuels her creativity.

LUCAS ALLEN

"If it is possible for a tree to be a soul mate, birch trees are mine. Their beauty captivates me. I have always been drawn to them and have even collected their bark since I was a small child. The library in my own home was constructed with birch logs and white knotty pine. The birch logs come from our property in Vermont; I saved them knowing I would use them for a project someday."

FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT'S 1958 SETH PETERSON COTTAGE

CHARLES MAYER

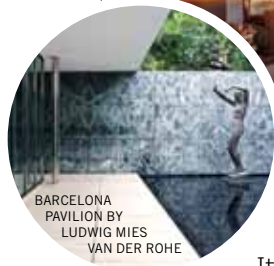

THE NEUBAUER FAMILY CABIN

"I was exposed to great modern architecture as a child. I grew up in a contemporary, architect-designed ranch house, and in summer I would visit my grandparents at their log cabin by a lake. I am visually and emotionally connected to a modern sentiment. Of course, Frank Lloyd Wright, being from Wisconsin, was a huge influence. I can look at anything he designed and be amazed, grateful to be an architect, and to be from Wisconsin."

SCREENED PORCH OF A RESIDENCE OVERLOOKING CAPE COD BAY

DURSTON SAYLOR

BARCELONA PAVILION BY LUDWIG MIES VAN DER ROHE

"I had this image of the Barcelona Pavilion long before I became an architect. That building is perfection! It evokes simple, modern, and perfect. The vertical planes and perspective of the building influenced the architecture of this Truro beach house I designed, where the lines of the house allow you to focus on the view beyond."